XUL Explorer provides its users with a set of features that will allow them to interact with XUL in either of a number of ways. The main functionality is deployed around an editor interface that offers code previewing capabilities, which can be performed either inline or separately, in a dedicated pop-up window. In order to help users even more, a predefined list of snippets is always accessible. When the application is launched, the separate pop-up preview pane is shown. This is achieved in two ways. Either the XUL snippets are available and used to auto-generate new panels for easier editing, or from the File menu the user can choose to launch the code editing panel, which will automatically generate the panel. When the user is done editing the snippet, the user can either reload the code into the panel or simply select the preview button, to preview the code before saving or previewing the panel. Loading the application can also be performed using saved files and those who require validation and error checking features will be happy to know that the app possesses both, in the form of a XUL validator and a dedicated Error Console. When the user attempts to load a saved file, the application will return a success or error depending on the status of the file.McClellan and Corcoran were joined in the Monday morning break in the first session of the investigation by two more deputies, Dean Martin of the Snohomish County Sheriff's Office and Ben Vanek of the King County Sheriff's Office. A Seattle Deputy, Greg Alexander, also began assisting the investigation Monday. McClellan and Corcoran, both 44, were booked into the county jail in Everett about 3 p.m. Sunday. Corcoran was booked on two counts of second-degree murder. McClellan was booked on one count of murder in the first degree and one count of assault in the first degree. News that a sheriff's deputy had shot and killed a suspect in the Lake Chelan double homicide provided a seething simmer to the pot of on-going tension between deputies and contract negotiators, who met Monday for a second day of talks at the Lake Chelan

Courthouse. The last time people spoke publicly about contract negotiations between the deputies and the Snohomish County Sheriff's Office, it seemed that an impasse had been reached in the tentative agreement reached after three days of intense talks. But What's New In XUL Explorer?

XUL Explorer is an XUL application with a previewing and handling similar to Firefox's. This brings the full power of its interface to developers working with the XUL language. It manages the actual XUL code and compiles it as well, offering numerous tools and add-ons with which the user can manage and edit various properties of the document itself. Built on a simple editor interface with the capability to be deployed in Firefox, the application is packed with various features that are useful for both casual users and those who are serious about taking advantage of the language. Code Snippet Snippets are a crucial feature offered by XUL Explorer, which can be dragged into the editor from the pop-up preview panel and the code will be compiled and immediately previewed within the editor interface. For those who want more than just snippets, XUL Explorer offers an extension gallery as well, which will allow users to find and install the various add-ons they require. XUL Explorer Beta Feedback This program is a beta release and the app is currently undergoing an extensive testing process, which, according to its developers, should be complete by this time next week. While the next release should contain a number of bug fixes and additional features, the current release is already proving to be very useful for developers who are working with the language.
