I would like to understand the reason of having boundary conditions in equation. I understand for example that if you solve the Poisson's equation in the absence of boundary condition you have infinite solutions for the potential outside the domain, because the potential inside the domain, which is just an integration of the function outside it, is infinite. $\nabla^2 V = -\rho$ But I don't understand how is possible to put a boundary condition at the infinity of the domain. For example, what I see every time is this, $\frac{d^2V}{dr^2} + \frac{dV}{dr} - \frac{V}{r} = -\rho$ $V = \frac{\rho r}{2} + C_1$ Now I know I have to take C_1 as an integration constant, but this always implies that the domain is bounded from outside by some constant, like for example by $r=R_c$ for example. A: Poisson's equation is an equation for the electrostatic potential V . It is a boundary value problem: you have to choose values for V on the boundary of the domain. The domain will be bounded. ∇^2
