Subcomandante Marcos said the family's re-entry was a message to their supporters the Zapatistas movement is back. He had spent almost a decade in hiding in Mexico while fighting a battle to bring rights to indigenous groups in rural parts of Mexico. Since the end of the 1970s, he was one of the main rebel leaders of the Zapatistas movement. He had fled to Mexico in the 1980s to escape an arrest warrant issued by the government of then President Miguel de la Madrid. 'Real message' Mr Marcos was quoted by the Associated Press as saying at a news conference that the Zapatistas movement had returned. "This is not a message for the government but a real message to our supporters to maintain their faith in us," he said. Mr Marcos said he had been unable to return because he was being hunted by Mexican authorities who wanted to arrest him for other crimes committed in the 1970s. "We considered ourselves prisoners in Mexico and so we took refuge in other countries," he said. "We cannot return to Mexico, but on the other hand, the government does not want us to return to Mexico either. "No-one bothers about the 6.5 million people killed in the period between 1962 and 1976, and no-one wants to know about that." The Zapatistas movement is seeking recognition of human rights in Mexico. It holds regular protests in parts of rural northern Mexico, parts of which remain largely unaffected by the Mexican drug trade. Violence According to figures released by the UN in 2011, some six million people have been killed in Mexico since the
