Thanks in advance. A: This is a problem of read.table (because read.csv doesn't care about extra column headers that read.table assumes). Try: read.table(text = "file.gz file.csv", header = TRUE, as.table = TRUE) Several approaches are currently being undertaken to develop cancer vaccines. The underlying rationale for all these studies is that a successful cancer vaccine should be capable of stimulating a strong and long-lasting protective immune response against tumours. A number of different types of cancer vaccines have been proposed which include peptides, proteins, whole tumour cells, subcellular fractions and allergen molecules in association with adjuvants. These approaches all share the property of being unable to generate a broad range of T cell epitopes; i.e. they are unable to stimulate the generation of immune responses against all types of tumour antigens. At the same time, they are also incapable of stimulating the generation of protective T cell responses against weakly immunogenic antigens or antigens that are not expressed on the surface of target cells. The use of whole, autologous tumour cells, and more especially whole tumour cells derived from patients, has not been found to be an effective method for stimulating CTL responses, as tumour antigens are usually down-regulated in whole cells during prolonged culture. (E. Wunderlich, et al., Proc. Natl. Acad. Sci. USA 88, 1147-1151 (1991)). Similarly, whole cell preparations are not often able to stimulate the generation of the T cell responses necessary for the generation of protective T cell responses against weakly immunogenic antigens or antigens that are not expressed on the surface of target cells. This is probably because of the increased immunogenicity that they have due to the large amount of the limited number of tumour antigens that are expressed at the surface of whole tumour cells. It has also been reported that the ability of tumour cell lines

Drinking the Kool Aid · the only important thing is to stick with the same brand of paint, all others are unimportant. Once you have, in fact, said that, you then start to think that's the only thing that matters. We have drifted to the land of "business is the only thing that matters", and there's a certain, you know, ah... A dark period in the history of the country. Maybe not so, you know?. I want to reassure the Australian community by saying that the important thing is to turn to the most correct understanding of the matter, which is that there is no link between migration, population size or quality of health care. This opinion was echoed by Dr Jaap Den Hertog, executive director of the Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences in Amsterdam, during his address at the opening of

Organic salts are emerging as a source of high-performing charge transport materials. While molecular salts typically generate large energy barriers, the inclusion of an inner salt, such as a nitrogen-rich triazole, reduces both barrier height and reorganization energy. As such, these materials are much more active than their molecular counterparts. Understanding how the inner salt influences charge transport, however, is lacking. Herein, we use small-molecule diffusion-limited currents
