"Magic Bullet Looks X8" Is specially designed for ncourse makers and 3D animators to color photos and video clips. I would go for: Mediaplayer 10Hz - 85db Whistle 20Hz - 85db Sonic 2 20Hz - 85db Shhh A lot of people have been saying that the D-160's are loud as heck.

I've been running them for a while now and the fact is - they are not really too loud for me. The only time I noticed that they were getting "too loud" is when I'm listening to them in low volume (10-15db) if the room is quite. But in most rooms I'm in - well, to be honest - they can be quite loud and others can say they are quiet. So if that's your concern - I don't think you need to worry - if you keep them on low volume and the room is quite. Also remember that room acoustics matters a whole lot - your room might be quite. The D-160's on low volume in the living room are not too loud - just shy of an urban - metro area if that makes sense. Like stated before, the frequency response of this headphone is a bit weird - almost like they stretch out the bass sound a bit more than normal but that's okay - bass is not really the focus of these headphones when playing music. So, let's now take a look at the treble, shall we? It takes a while to get good at this. But with a little training, you can achieve great results. The D-160's have just a bit of "bump" in the midrange section and, as a result, do not sound as airy as I would like them to sound. But, hey, the price tag isn't too bad. It would be better if the treble wasn't quite
